

About the Authors: Michael Gallery, Ph.D., CAE, FASAE combines his nearly 24 years of experience as an association executive with his academic training in human performance technology to bring clients expertise in strategic planning, team building, program evaluation, leadership training, staff and volunteer performance development, and group facilitation. During his 23-year career with the American College of Emergency Physicians, Michael held a variety of positions, including 14 years as the College's chief operating officer. Dr. Gallery has also held a variety of leadership positions in the association management profession. He is an ASAE fellow and a past chair of the certifying body for the profession. As president of OPIS, LLC, Michael has successfully helped over 100 association clients, large and small, resolve a variety of issues, including governance.

Stephen C. Carey, Ph.D., CAE, FASAE was appointed President and Chief Executive Officer of AMMR Association Management Consulting (AMMR) in July 1995. AMMR consults in the key functional areas of strategic planning and research, organizational development, governance, management and leadership. Dr. Carey specializes in strategic planning and administrative management operations. Dr. Carey is an ASAE and the Center for Association Leadership Charter Class Fellow (FASAE) and one of two trade association executives to be initially appointed to the Board of Examiners for the Malcolm Baldrige Award for Performance Excellence and Innovation. He is considered to be one of the industry's leading experts in association strategic planning, leadership, governance, and management.

Any organization is faced with answering some fundamental questions: Why do we exist? Whose needs will we meet? Which needs? How will we meet them? How will we measure success? Some organizations go about answering these questions in an orderly, systematic way. Many answer these questions in a haphazard way – the former group of organizations is far more successful than the latter.

There is certainly no shortage of authors offering numerous books filled with suggestions on how to run a better organization. Often, those ideas fail to bring about the change promised in the long-term. That is not to say that none of those ideas work. Many of them do. The difficulty lies in implementing change in a systematic way, verses a piecemeal way, to bring about long term, effective change.

The purpose of this book is to help you design systemic solutions to the systemic problems you have identified with easy-to-use examples and questions that draw out key areas where the organization needs to improve. The book isn't just about the discovery, but about establishing a framework that leaders can use to organize and make sense of the information they have and help them engage in "backwards thinking" as you attempt to identify – and fix – real-world problems with practical solutions.
